

My Wooden Heart Necklace

Project N184

Designer: Andrea Morici

This adorably woody necklace's centerpiece is an antiqued copper faux bois heart pendant, which is flanked on either side by twig-shaped connectors and pretty round wood beads.

Instructions:

- Using a pair of flush cutters cut a length of beading wire sixteen inches long. Secure one end of the wire with a Bead Stopper.
- Onto the beading wire, thread the following:
 - o a 6/0 copper Czech seed bead
 - o a wood bead
 - o a seed bead
 - o a wood bead
 - o seed bead
 - o wood bead
 - o a copper woodland spacer bead
- Repeat this stringing pattern, minus the very first seed bead, ten more times. The final time, omit the woodland spacer and use a seed bead instead.
- Add a crimp tube to the end of the strand, but do not crimp it yet. Thread the end of the strand through a closed copper jump ring and back through the crimp tube and several of the beads. Pull snug, and crimp the tube. Trim excess wire from this end of the strand.
- Remove the bead stopper from the other end of the strand, and add a crimp tube. Do not crimp it yet. Thread this end of the strand through another closed jump ring, back through the crimp tube and several of the beads. Pull snug, and crimp the tube. Trim off excess beading wire.
- Place a crimp bead cover over each of the crimps, and gently squeeze closed. Set the strand aside while you work on the other part of the necklace.
- Cut six pieces of twenty gauge copper wire at two inches long each. Create a simple wire loop at the end of each piece, essentially turning them into eyepins.
- Onto each of these eyepins, thread a wood bead. Create another simple loop on the opposite end of each, and trim off excess wire.
- Open the loops on either side of each of the six links, the same way you would open a jump ring.
- Thread a loop on the end of one of the links through one of the closed jump rings at the end of the beaded strand. Thread the other loop on this same link through the loop at one end of the medium length twig connectors (FCL-7188).
- Thread a loop on one end of another link through the loop at the other end of this twig connector. Thread the loop on the other end of this link through one of the loops on the sideways twig connector (FCL-7184).
- Thread a loop on one end of another link through the loop at the other end of this sideways twig connector. Thread the loop on the other end of this link through one of the loops on the long twig connector (FCO-3457). Before you connect another link onto the other end of the long twig connector, thread the twig through the bail on the wooden copper heart.
- Complete the other half of this part of the necklace as a mirror image of the first. Close all of the loops, except for the very last loop.
- To the very last loop, add the circular half of the toggle clasp. Now close the loop.
- Connect the twig toggle bar to the closed jump ring on the other end of the strand using an open oval jump ring. Close the jump ring after you have done so.
